Nor did it put a stop to his naval activity in reorganizing the fleet, and in arming every branch of the navy service. The camps of the army were as busy as her manufacturing plants. Immediately after the triumph of the Franco-Prussian war, measures were taken to organize the army upon a basis of 800,000 men. The army of Prussia, equally enthusiastic in its devotion to the nation, has been as significant in its development. The avowed policy of Bismarck was to "keep the
